Tutorials (TD)
Professor: G. Hinnebusch
Course Code: FDL_LEA_L1_S1_AN_CIVI_C1

Course description

This course aims to help students understand how British political institutions operate by way of examining the central questions of controversy surrounding them. Should Britain adopt a codified constitution? Is the British Parliament sovereign? Should the House of Lords be abolished? Does Britain have a presidential Prime Minister? Has the creation of a UK Supreme court strengthened the British judiciary? Are traditional British party allegiances defunct? Has devolution opened the door to the UK's eventual breakup? Has BREXIT restored British sovereignty? Students will gain a grasp of the structure and allocations of power that underpin the central institutions of British governance as well as their mode of functioning in order to formulate arguments for and against major controversies that implicate their current design and operation.

Learning Objectives

By the end of the course, students will be able to:
Explain the function of major UK political institution
Identify the principle controversies that define modern British politics
Understand the balance of power between institutions
Formulate arguments for and against reform of governing institutions

Course Prerequisites

Students should have an interest in modern day UK politics and a willingness to explore their dynamics through regular consultation of the major British newspapers of the day.

Methods of Instruction

The course revolves around discussion of readings assigned in advance. This presupposes that students have done the assigned readings and are able to respond to questions and participate in the resolution of issues around which each session is aimed.

Assessment and Final grade

40% presentation of text

40% in class written response during final session

20% participation

Course Requirements

Your text presentation should aim to introduce the topic and controversy at issue. It should be both descriptive (explaining the institution and its operations) and analytical (identifying strengths, weaknesses, potential areas of conflict).

The written response serves to evaluate how well you have understood the main themes of the class.

Regular participation in class discussion is important.
