Course Code: FDL_SCPO_L2_S4_SCIENCE_POLITIQUE_T3

Course description

Following the theoretical approach of various political organizations and regimes, the course will elaborate on different examples of contemporary forms of government, such as the United Kingdom, USA, China, Russia, Iran, and India. In order to fully understand the founding principles of the different political organizations and apply the specific methodology of Comparative Politics. The course is entirely in English to enable students to master the specific vocabulary associated with this field of study.

Learning Objectives

Upon successful completion of the course, the learner is expected to be able to introduce the thoughts on democracy from Ancient Greece to the modern political world; examine different governance systems; gain a basic understanding of the relationships between individuals, actors, and processes across various political systems, both historical and contemporary; and develop an individual capability to enhance approaches and develop perspectives on the central themes, theories, concepts, and questions of the contemporary study of comparative politics.

Course Prerequisites

The course does not have any prerequisites for students continuing their education in the fields of Political Science, International Relations and History.

Method of Instruction

Lectures are held with the assistance of PowerPoint slides; group discussions and debates; pre-class readings to provide information about the main context of the week; regular attendance to maintain students' focus on the course; and two written exams involving both objective questions and essay questions to evaluate the acquisitions.

Assessment and Final Grade

Each student is required to take a proctored mid-term exam and a final exam. Additionally, students are expected to collaborate on a group project based on a given topic and present it in class.

Course Requirements

Regular attendance is mandatory. Each student is supposed to read the required readings provided by the lecturer before the related lesson. The supplemental readings are optional and aim to provide additional knowledge to complement the required readings.
