

Power and Order in World Politics (Bachelor Year 3 / Fall)

Bachelor in Social Sciences / Faculty of Social Sciences, Economics and Law

Introduction

This course examines the fragile coexistence between the pursuit of power and the aspiration for international order in global politics. More specifically, it analyzes the contemporary liberal order, as shaped largely by US power. Rather than presuming its stability or legitimacy, we seek to interrogate the principles, norms, interests and asymmetries that shape it, as well as those that threaten to dismantle the prevailing international architecture. Students will engage with the fundamental issues that constitute "order" in a world lacking any form of global sovereign authority. Areas of emphasis include the redefinition of power in our present world, the existence and influence of "great power competition", the scope and limits of multilateralism nowadays, the role of values and institutions. Additionally, we will analyze the legal, ethical and operational dilemmas posed by US military interventions and the resulting imbalance in global power configurations.

Each "TD" will be focused on a policy paper presented by a group of students. Students are part of the US Department of State. As a group, they need to write a policy paper for the Secretary of State. This policy paper will focus on a specific issue that could impact the liberal order, making it a considerable topic for US foreign policy. The goal is to convince the US Secretary of State of both the importance of the problem and the coherence of the proposed actions.

Objectives

By the end of the course, students will be able to:

- Understand the theoretical and historical foundations of the international order;
- Assess the mechanisms and institutions constituting the "rules-based order" and interrogate their legitimacy, effectiveness and susceptibility to contestation by rising and revisionist powers;
- Analyze the role of asymmetry in shaping global power configurations;
- Critically evaluate the legal, ethical and political justifications for military interventions and their long-term impact on international order.
